Message from the Chair

Dear Friends of German Studies,

This past year has been breathtaking in every sense of the word: so many were the activities, the good and bad news in the department, that it is helpful to pause for a moment and have a look back.

Without doubt, the passing of our long-time secretary, Elizabeth Soallis, on December 23, 2006, saddened us all. Yet, the memorial service our senior colleagues organized in January filled many of us with joy as Elizabeth’s good spirit, politeness, and humor came alive again.

Unfortunately, searches for two new colleagues—welcome, Miriam and Max—and an external review did not allow us much time to grieve. We had to prepare an extensive self-study, including an outline for the future strategic plan of the department. From what we provided, the external reviewers concluded: “Our committee was... impressed by the... Department as it presently operates. It is now approaching a crucial decision point in its serious ambition to prepare for the next great leap, the development of a graduate program...”

To this extent, plans are under way to establish a Graduate Certificate in German that would allow graduate students who pursue their PhD in related disciplines such as philosophy, history, or comparative literature to augment their qualifications by taking graduate courses in German literature with us. To give you a glimpse of how close we have been working with colleagues from these and other related fields, we introduce you to some of them in this newsletter.

In order to pursue these and other plans, we will continue our excellence in research and teaching. Hence, we are proud that besides our usual academic activities of attending conferences and publishing our research in scholarly journals, Caroline Schaumann finished her book, titled Memory Matters: Generational Responses to Germany’s Nazi Past in Recent Women’s Literature and passed her fourth year-review. Erik Butler finished his first book, Political Vampires: Cultural Transformation and the Modern Monster, and Marianne Lancaster was promoted to senior lecturer. And Erdmann Waniek received a Teaching Award from Emory’s Center for Teaching and Curriculum for his skillful art of challenging and engaging students with literature.

We are equally excited and thankful that six members from Atlanta’s German community formed our first Advisory Council, whose mission is to be ambassadors for our department, infuse us with some ideas, and help us raise scholarships for our students. That brings me to the last, but not least, point: many of our students stood out in their achievements, whether it was writing an honors thesis (Whitney Hostetter) or receiving a Fulbright scholarship (Ryan Plocher and Whitney Hostetter) or a Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst summer stipend (Paul Syers, Alex Vinson, and Audrey Meunier). Congratulations to all of you!

I very much look forward to continuing work with our students, my colleagues in the department and at Emory College, the German-speaking community in Atlanta, and our alumni!

Peter Höyng
Welcome to Our New Faculty Members

This past academic year, Miriam Udel-Lambert, assistant professor of Yiddish Language, Literature, and Culture, joined our department from Harvard University’s Department of Comparative Literature, where her dissertation focused on the ethics of speech in modernist literature and used Yiddish works to investigate some broader questions in modernism. Her article on the Yiddish fable writer Eliezer Shneyberg recently appeared in Paideuma: A Journal of Yiddish Literary History.

Miriam Udel-Lambert
Assistant Professor of Yiddish Language, Literature, and Culture

Yiddish at Emory

With this year’s appointment of Miriam Udel-Lambert as assistant professor of Yiddish language, literature, and culture, Yiddish has gained a permanent address at Emory. Udel-Lambert will start off by teaching a beginner’s course in the Yiddish language that will integrate literature and culture. She will teach yiddish of yiddish—with all instruction taking place in the language itself from the first day of class. She also looks forward to teaching seminars in literature and culture that will be accessible to both members of Yiddish and those working in translation. These courses will draw on her dissertation work about the ethics of speech in Yiddish modernism and the new research she will be undertaking at Emory on the modern Jewish use of the picturesque form and its relation to the European Bildungsroman (novel of social formation). Udel-Lambert looks forward to working in concert with colleagues in the German Department and the Institute for Jewish Studies to build a comprehensive program in Yiddish literature and culture.

Mitàn irzehi fviut!

German Studies

German Studies is a vibrant community of graduate students from around the world who strive to understand German literature, culture, and society. The program is located in the Department of German Studies at Emory University.

Doris M. Ekert, assistant professor, History (lecturer), teaches modern German history in the history department. She spent the summer in Berlin doing research for her new project, which looks at tourism to the inner-German border until 1989. In the past academic year, she taught her first graduate class on controversies in German historiography after 1945. She also developed a freshman seminar called History That Never Happened and discussed various "what ifs" with her participants. In spring 2008 she again will teach the modern German history survey and hopes to see many German Studies students there. Ekert has just edited a conference volume titled Institutions of Public Memory of German and American Politicians (Washington D.C.: German Historical Institute/Shaker Press, 2007) and published the article "The Transnational Beginnings of West German Zeitgeschichte in the 1950s," Central European History 40-2 (2007): 63-87.

Kevin C. Rones, assistant professor, Music History, spent spring 2007 on leave with the help of a University Research Committee grant, completing the manuscript "Music, Criticism, and the Challenge of History: Shaping Modern Musical Thought in Late-Nineteenth-Century Vienna," which is currently under review. This year, he published the complete correspondence between Austrian music theorist Heinrich Schenker (1868-1935) and Dutch composer Benjamin Abeles (1855-1932), in German transcription and English translation, in The Schenker Correspondence Project, an online publication of Columbia University. Karmen is currently coediting, with Walter Frisch of Columbia University, a revised and expanded edition of Brahms and His World, to be published by Princeton University Press in conjunction with the 2009 Bard Music Festival in Annandale-on-Hudson, New York.

Deborah E. Lipstadt is Dorot Professor of Modern Jewish and Holocaust Studies and director of the Tam Institute for Jewish Studies. This year she received the honorary doctorate degree of Humane Letters from John Jay College of Criminal Justice and from the Hebrew Union College in Los Angeles. Lipstadt was in Bucharest, Romania, in June as a member of the U.S. delegation to the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe conference on Combating Discrimination and Promoting Mutual Respect and Understanding. Her book History on Trial: My Day in Court with David Irving (2005) was released in paperback in 2006, and she is currently working on a book that looks at Holocaust denial at the beginning of the twenty-first century.

She recently received grants from the Berrie Foundation, Graul Foundation, Scheckter Foundation, and Rocker Foundation to support translation of resource material on the website www.perisot.org—which documents the libel trial. David Irving v. Penguin Books UK and Deborah Lipstadt—into Middle Eastern languages.

This year we would like to introduce some of the affiliated faculty members with whom we collaborate. This series will continue with more portraits in our next issue.

Angelika Bonnert, associate professor of Comparative Literature in the Institute of the Liberal Arts, identifies her main research interests as narrative and theories of representation, historical memory, nation and cultural identity, feminism and Marxism.

Her work began with an interest in the utopian possibilities of the not-yet (the non-place), then moved to a study of the reality of displacement in the contemporary world, and is currently focused on the shifting meaning of place in our understanding of selves-in-communities.

David Carr, Charles Howard Candler Professor, Philosophy, lectured at the universities of Helsinki and Copenhagen, at Loyola Marymount (Los Angeles), and Marquette (Milwaukee). Next year he will present papers at Groningen (Netherlands) and Georgetown universities. He is currently working on a book on the philosophy of language with the following publications: "The Reality of History," in History, Historiography, and Science, ed. Tom Stocker and Joseph Margolis (Albmont, England: Ashgate, 2006) 126-31; "Wesleyogeg on Kant on Transcendence," in Transcendental Ideologies, ed. S. Craneil and J. Malpass (Stanford: Stanford University Press, 2007) 28-42; and "History as Orientation: Kuhn on Historical Culture and Narration," History and Theory 45 (May 2006): 229-43.

Cathy Cornth, chair, Winship Distinguished Research Professor, Comparative Literature and English, is currently using a Quadrange Research Grant to work on a video project. This NIA Project at Grady Hospital is being done in conjunction with co-principal investigator Nadine Kaslow, Psychiatry and Chief of Psychology at Grady Hospital. Cornth is also completing a book on the effects of trauma in relation to history that extends the work of her last book, Unclaimed Experience: Trauma, Narrative, and History. She recently published the article "Repetition and Eunice: Literature and the Memoir," in Memoir, special issue. Cornth solicited and presented papers at Bard College ("Arendt on Dark Times") and University of California-Irvine ("Living and History"), and along with "Cultures of Violence."
In Memory of Elizabeth Soils 1937–2006

What follows is a letter by Viola Westbrook, read during a memorial service on January 29, 2007.

Lizzie Elizabeth, dear Elizabeth,

We are coming together tonight to celebrate your remarkable life of extraordinary courage and civility, of loyalty and love.

We began this year without you. Or so we thought. But actually, we find that you are certainly among us. Even though your chair is empty, your wonderful smile that cheered us every morning still seems to linger, and your marvelous sense of humor that so brightened the daily routine still reverberates in our hearts.

Your great courage inspires our work; even more, your generosity and ever-present willingness to help demand that we try to live up to your example.

But it is your legacy—the legacy that you entrusted to me the last time I visited you in the hospital—that profoundly challenges us to uphold what you have taught us. It is the legacy of a life lived in the service of building and maintaining harmony among us all, of treating each of us—whether students, staff, faculty, or dean—with equal kindness and dignity. We will honor your legacy, Lizzie Elizabeth, and commit to that same standard as we go forward.

I miss your friendship and I miss your warm hugs when I returned from being away awhile. I miss our outings and our trips. And maybe I faintly hear you now saying as no one else could say it, "shush, shush." Dear Elizabeth, we are indebted to you for your many years of loyalty and dedication, and with a full heart, we thank you.

What a gift your life has been to us! Lizzie Elizabeth, we thank you!

Staff News

Our sincere thanks to Susannah McCormick for assisting the department for two semesters as a work-study student. Susannah graduated this spring from Emory University with a double major in biology and German. She plans to apply to a master's program in microbiology at Ohio State University this fall. Susannah provided outstanding help for our daily operations. Her presence in the office was always a source of joy, and her pleasant demeanor and tireless enthusiasm will be difficult for successors to match. We are confident that Susannah will continue her successful academic career, and we wish her all the best.

Teresa Whaley-White, who graduated with a major in German and a minor in political science last December, helped us through some very difficult times. After Elizabeth Soils passed away, Teresa immediately stepped to the fore. In demanding circumstances that included the department's self-study, faculty searches, and many other projects, Teresa kept things flowing smoothly. She is now pursuing a career with an international company, where her proficiency in German will add to his many other distinctions. Thanks, Teresa, for your exceptional skills and your wonderful sense of humor.

We welcome Marion B. Hughes as the department's new program administrative assistant. Marion—who was born in Germany and raised in the U.S.—earned a BA in German and international relations from Marquette University. Although this is her first experience in a university setting, Marion has gained very valuable knowledge through internships in international banking and recently as an administrator and teacher's assistant at St. James UMC Preschool and Our Lady of the Assumption School in Atlanta. She is excited to join the department and is thrilled at the prospect of speaking German every day.

German High School Teachers Visit Emory

For the third year in a row, the department invited German teachers from Atlanta's high schools to spend half a day on our campus. With the generous support of the Center for Teaching and Curriculum, senior lecturer Viola Westbrook organized a stimulating program for our guests on Saturday, November 4, 2006. Following Department Chairman Peter Hory's welcome of attendees, Assistant Professor Erik Butler shared with his audience a glimpse into his research on the cultural history of vampires. This presentation was followed by a discussion of topics of mutual interest, such as curricular discussions between high school and college, concerns about losing German programs in high schools, and how the department can help keep these programs strong in the Atlanta area. A congenial lunch offered more opportunities for conversation, the exchange of ideas, and the discussion of professional concerns. The visit concluded with a tour of the campus and a delightful round of Kaffee und Kuchen hosted by our German TA, Melvin Huch, and the students of the German House on Clairmont Campus.

Visiting instructors Francen Markx and Allison Beringer toasting Beringer's new position

With sadness, we say goodbye to our visiting faculty, Alison Beringer and Francen Markx. Beringer has accepted a one-year position as visiting assistant professor at Colgate University in Hamilton, New York. Markx will start a tenure-track position as assistant professor at George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia. Both colleagues contributed greatly to the life of the department; they will be greatly missed. We wish both of them the best of luck in their new endeavors!

UPCOMING EVENTS FOR 2007–2008

We are looking forward to a new academic year filled with promising events. Jamie Melton graciously has agreed to revive the department's tradition of the German Studies Roundtable. He has put together several lecturers for the upcoming semester. On September 7, George Weidemann—associate professor of history at the University of Alabama—will present the paper "August von Kotzebue and His Critics: Rethinking the Origins of German National Culture." The Second Roundtable on November 5 will focus on contemporary literature and culture with a lecture by Angela Reimer, associate professor in the Graduate Institute of Liberal Arts. "Nostalgia: Gunter Eich's and Dmitri Volf's Confessions." Both Roundtable events are in English and are meant as an informal exchange among departments, faculty, and students.

In March 2008 we are planning a reading and discussion with journalist and author Wilke Bruch. Stefaniker unter deutschen Augen (2006), translated as My Father's Country: The Story of a German Family (2008), reconstructs the life of his father, Herr Georg Krümmer, a collaborator in the attempted assassination of Hitler on July 20, 1944. Krümmer was hanged as a Nazi in 1948. His son, Wilke Bruch, has repeatedly met his father's father, has interviewed the family's daily life, from photographs, letters, documents, diary entries, family archives, songs, and poems. As Germany's first female newscaster (in Neues aus Wahrheit from 1971 to 1973), Bruch promises to be an engaging speaker. Her reading and the discussion will take place in English.

The 2007–2008 German Film Series Red Borders focuses on geographical, ideological, and psychological borders and includes Weimar classics such as Das Cabinet des Dr. Caligari (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari, 1919), contemporary low-budget successes such as Der Planen die Welt (Flat on 36th St, 2005), and Das Leben der Andrea (The Lives of Others, 2006), as well as lesser-known movies such as One Two Three (1961), Black Box (2002), and Nachtposten (Night Shifts, 1990).

News from Our Students

German Studies at Emory has provided me not only with a strong grasp of a language, its culture, politics, literature, and history but also a residence, more than a few adventures abroad, and my first job after college. After living in the German House for two years, studying abroad on the Vienna summer program and with the Institute for the International Education of Students in Berlin, and majoring in German, I’ll be teaching English next year in München as a Fulbright teaching assistant. Though I spent relatively few hours for a German major to Trimble Hall, I couldn’t have made it back to Deutschland without our little department. Thanks for all the help, the wonderful home and, of course, die wunderschöne Haupstadt. —Ryan Fischer

Since the first time I met with a professor in the German department, I have had a wonderful experience learning German at Emory. The department is one of the most friendly and open on campus, and the faculty is very adept at helping students at all skill levels of German. I came to Emory already with a solid understanding of the German language. The German department faculty have helped me not only better my German but they have shown me so much more of the rich culture and history that the German-speaking countries have. I was lucky enough to be chosen for a Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst-sponsored summer research internship in Munich this year: Thus, I am able to pursue both of my chief passions: physics and German. The enriched experience with German culture that I have gained from the department has helped me feel more at home here in Munich as I conduct my research and live on my own, completely immersed in the culture. —Paul Syers

Thomason will use this data in a book project that investigates an underlying cultural logic for evaluating human worth and social “fitness,” and follows how this logic plays out: sometimes through caring people and sometimes through killing them.

As a recipient of a SIRE grant, I also will be using this data to develop a project of my own. Given that the project is still in its early stages, I don’t have a firm topic; however, I am beginning to look closely at the idea of cost-benefit analysis as a logic underlying the Nazi killing rationale.

Life in Berlin is great—the city is fantastic, the people are friendly, and my project is turning out to be as extremely formative, both academically and personally. —Alex Vinson

My Year as a Teaching Assistant at Emory University

Emory’s Department of German Studies has been importing teaching assistants from Germany for the past seven years to teach our undergraduates. These skilled and dedicated teachers are selected by the Fulbright Foundation. Melvin Haack will be replaced by Benjamin Becker from Düren, Germany, for academic year 2007–2008. With thanks to Melvin for all he contributed, we are pleased to present his report.

“Our only wish is for you to communicate with: know language, know countries, know people. Let your memory be your travel bag.” —Alexander Solzhenitsyn

Dear friends, students, and colleagues:

I used this poignant quotation by Alexander Solzhenitsyn to open my application for the job of teaching assistant in the U.S. back in September 2005. To this day—as I have to admit with a shamed face—I haven’t read a single book by the author, but I surely have lived the quote. My travel bag of memories is about to burst, because to me there I carry the images and experiences of two wonderful months. If you have a minute, join me in looking back at this venture some three years ago.

When my plane landed in New York in August 2006, I was a purveyor of British English. That was to change soon. My fluency and confidence in speaking (mostly under the caring assistance of my roommates and the friendly women of the Checkers Cab (Hotline) improved on every level; I travelled transformed into trash, and I curiously set out to explore two countries. First of all, living away from Germany actually brought me closer to it, for I was able to gain an outside look at all the things that I always had taken for granted, including crazy bread. Then, of course, there was the U.S. Apart from having an exciting and also everyday life in Atlanta, I have seen quite a lot of heaven and hell between Alaska and Hawaii.

Melvin Haack promoting our Summer Abroad Program in Vienna at the CIPA Fair at the DUC

Dear Melvin, melvin.haack@web.de

Summer Abroad in Vienna 2007

For the thirty-fourth year in a row, Emory students have discovered the rich cultural heritage of Vienna. The nineteen students who participated in this year’s program were an especially diverse group: Three international students and members of the Emory community from numerous disciplines and graduate students took part in three levels of intensive German classes. Besides pursuing a rigorous course of study, they explored many spots in Vienna and its environs (for example, the monastery of Melk). This year, we were especially fortunate to draw on the expertise of Martin Varga, a native of Slovakia, who organized a special tour of his hometown, Bratislava. Another highlight of the summer-abroad program was the opportunity to attend opera performances, including an impressive staging of Verdi’s Don Carlos; such activities complemented the music courses offered by Timothy Altenrein. For the second time, we met with local Emory alumni for dinner and conversation. Johnny Marhelen Otto, Alex Vinson, and Shoham Elazar helping to promote our Summer Abroad Program during this year’s CIPA Fair at the DUC

I climbed Lady Liberty in New York, roamed the streets of New Orleans at Mardi Gras, gambled five bucks on the sad and greedy slots of Las Vegas, and gazed into the mighty silences of the Grand Canyon (and still wonder why it’s not called “Supreme Canyon”).

Yet, as important as language and countries may be, after all it’s people who turn all those "facts" into real experiences and add color to the memories of this adventure, which led me to discover foreign spheres as well as myself. Dear friends stood out against existing stereotypes and great colleagues turned the humble halls of Trimble into more than just a place to work. I never will forget the caring face of Elizabeth Scoll, who was the first one to welcome me to my new job with a smile, coffee, and a good joke. Finally, my students: that wild bunch of clever and sassy people, who eagerly and successfully contributed to make teaching a pleasure and an experience of personal growth.

Time to bring this story to an end with one of the taglines this university has taught me: "Teaching assistants will come and teaching assistants will go, but Dooley goes on forever.”

Stay classy, Emory!

Euer Melvin melvin.haack@web.de

Manfred Asamer (center) is a graduate of Goetsche Business School (REBMA) and president and CEO of Asamer & Hufnagl Holding AG. He invited this year’s group to learn more about his company and hometown Greunen where he treated the group to a boat ride on scenic lake Tannensee.

Lippolcorto (90C) summed up his experience: “This is the most beautiful city I have ever stayed in.” Khoali Shah (90C) added: “Vienna is a city of endless possibilities.”
